Beating the Clock

I don't think my father would mind me telling you that he had a fender bender last month. He is in his 70s and doesn't see as well as he used to and took a shortcut at sunset across an empty parking lot to get groceries and didn't see the thin metal pole in his path. He hit it hard, doing a considerable amount of damage to himself and the vehicle. Luckily, I was close by to pick up Mom and get him to the hospital, where miraculously he didn't break a single bone but was just very bruised up and sore.

It hit me hard, as I sensed in him his embarrassment and aggravation at what had happened and could see in his eyes the sadness in his realization and resignation to the fact that he can't do things as well as he used to.

Even long after getting them home and calling the family to let everyone know he was going to be okay, I couldn't shake the feeling I got from him and the empathy I felt for my Dad that day.

In my own life, I find myself looking at opportunities more and more from the perspective of what effort and toll they will take more than what my initial desire for them may be.

Friends call and say, "Hey, the gang is going skiing... you should come with us!" My mind races. Man, I love to ski. Man, my knees are really getting bad. Man, do I really want to do that?

In his debut novel, author Alex Witchel wrote that the older you get, the more you see there are these crevices in life where things fall in and you just can't reach them to pull them back out. So you can sit next to them and weep or you can get up and move forward. You have to stop worrying about who and what's not here and start worrying about who and what is.

If you want to start your own team, try competition, choreograph for first time, take a big clogging trip... don't put it off for too long. Of course, be rational and not careless and always plan ahead and don't take on more than you can handle. But, also, don't wait until it is too late to reach for your own stars.

Time marches on, and each of us will take our own journey of personal discovery and face our own limitations.

For many of us, it will take that obstacle that gets hit to make us slow down. I just want to live until then without regrets.

Happy clogging! Jeff Driggs

Golden Girls

Montana Ladies Love to Dance for Audiences, and For Themselves

by Mary Pickett, Billings Gazette
Billings, Montana

As the song “All That Jazz” pumps from a CD player, Ginger Green, 90, steps out in time to the music.

Dressed in black top and pants and a silver sequined vest with red tuxedo lapels, Green kicks, bounces, shimmies and spins, keeping up with younger members of the Golden Dancers in their 70s and 80s.

About the only dance move they don't do is the splits.

During the group's twice weekly practices, dancers rehearse numbers they regularly perform at senior centers, retirement homes and birthday and anniversary parties.

Comedy, too, is part of the routines.

At the end of “All that Jazz,” most of the dancers move off the dance floor, leaving Green to ham it up in front of an imaginary crowd.

As part of the gag, fellow dancer JoAnn Sowden is sent out to push a protesting Green into the wings.

In the next number — Elvis Presley belting out “All Shook Up” — the dancers swivel their hips and shake raised hands.

Golden Girls

When a large black flower pinned to the top of Green's head loses its mooring, Green picks it off the floor and pitches to the side without missing a step.

The group started in 1987 as part of the Widow and Widowers Association. It later opened membership to married dancers. Mana Lesman Seward has instructed the group since then.

Birdie Dapples, 70, a retired Rocky Mountain College math professor, joined the group three years ago because it looked like fun.

Although she had taken ballet when she was younger, Dapples hadn't danced in years.

Several other members, including Sowden, 77, and Joan Dimick, 76, and have no background in dance and it hasn't held them back.

Mata Wagner, 81, grew up in a Baptist home in which dancing was considered a sin.

When she was about 65 years old, "I decided it was no longer a sin" and joined the Golden Dancers, she said with a smile.

Sonya Skaggs, 72, started taking dance lessons after moving from teaching Spanish to a desk job. When she began gaining weight, she knew she had to be more active. An instructor she was taking clogging lessons from suggested she might be interested in the Golden Dancers.

Not only has dancing been a fun physical workout, it keeps Skaggs' mind sharp, too.

Ginger Green joined the Golden Dancers in 1989 after reading about them in The Gazette.

The dancers practice on Mondays and Thursdays. In addition to dancing to Broadway tunes, they learn western and Spanish dances as well as the Charleston.

Dancing in front of an audience sharpened the group's routines.

"Performing was a big step because most of us had never performed," Green said. "To get out in front of people? We had butterflies."

Three years ago, Green had a small stroke.

"That kind of slowed me up," she said, but it hasn't kept her from dancing.

Why does she continue to dance?

"It's the ladies in it," she said. "They are really super."

Ginger Green, center, dances with the Golden Dancers at Casa Village Community Center. At 90, Green is the oldest of the dancers.

Dancing is just one of a long list of interests that has kept Ginger Green active.

Green continues to roller skate, a sport she picked up as a child growing up in California.

Green graduated from high school in Torrance, Calif., in 1940 and went on to get a two-year degree in fashion design.

Although she never had a job in the fashion industry, she used her training to make clothing for herself and her three daughters from her own patterns.

By the time she got out of college, World War II had started and Green went to work in an aircraft factory as a riveter, working 12 hour days, six days a week. In her time off, she and a friend went to Long Beach Pike, an entertainment area, where they roller skated and went to dances with music by big bands like Tommy Dorsey, Glenn Miller and Lawrence Welk.

She also took flying lessons and got her pilot's license, but was too short at 4 feet, 9 inches to join the Women's Air Force Service Pilots.

"I was too short for everything," Green said with mock disgust.

At one of the wartime dances, she met her future husband, George, who was in the U.S. Army Air Corps.

After a couple of dates, he was sent overseas to the South Pacific as a B-24 bombardier.

They didn't correspond, so she was surprised when he called a year later on his return to California.

"George who?" she asked when he said his name. They married in 1946 and moved to Thompson Falls where he originally was from. They moved to Billings in 1968, where George was a stockbroker until he retired in 1986.

They have three grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Clogging Down Under

Country Cloggers Stay in Step with the American Dance of Clogging

Wander past the historic Tallarook Mechanics Hall in Victoria, Australia on a Friday morning and you're in for a treat.

Blaring from the sound system will be Lady Gaga, Beyonce or some country classics from Keith Urban or Lee Kernaghan - as organiser Bev Kilpatrick explains it, "anything with a beat".

And bopping away to this beat is Bev's troop of Country Cloggers, dressed in their club colours of purple and white.

While this popular style, brought to Australia in the early '90s from the US, is called clogging, Bev, the Victorian representative for the Australian Clogging Association, says it has nothing to do with Dutch shoes.

"It's a folk dance started in the Appalachian mountains in America and has roots buried deep in the Southern states of America," says the woman who teaches morning clogging classes in Tallarook on a Friday and Kilmore on a Monday.

"The word clogging is actually Gaelic for "clock" which refers to clogging as a dance done in time with the music's beat. We dance in lines, use shoes with taps on the toes and heels, (and) like square dancing, the moves are called and like in Irish dancing there's lots of toe and heel work."

Bev says since she first started clogging in the mid-'90s, the style has taken off, with 12 clubs in Victoria, including Terang, Warrnambool and Daylesford, catering to ages from five to 80, and both sexes.

While clubs meet weekly for lessons, state and national clubs gather each year, with Victoria's convention in October in Anglesea, and the national convention in Queanbeyan in September.

"When you get to convention and there are 400 dancers on the floor it's a huge noise," she says.

"In the US there's pure clogging percussion competitions where they even have categories where the judges turn their backs to the dancers and they don't see but listen to the tap sounds.

"In Australia we do not have any competitions at all because it takes away from the spontaneity and the fact that everyone can get up and have a go."

Bev, 66, insists participants don't need past dance experience.

"For me it's about abandonment and a level of creativity."

The Country Cloggers move to the beat. There are 12 clubs devoted to the dance craze in Victoria. Picture: Greg Scullin

Top 3 Ways Your Dancers Can Deal with Their Own Dance Mom

From an article by Melanie Rembrandt

As clogging instructors, we are used to dealing with “Dance Moms.” Sometimes, though, our own students may need some advice dealing with their own “Dance Mom.”

“Did you practice today?”

“Are you ready to leave yet?”

Do any of these statements sound familiar?

Well, if your Mom is taking you to class and paying for you to learn how to dance, sometimes, things can get stressful. With this in mind, here are...

3 Ways to Deal with Your Dance Mom

1. Take a moment.

Sometimes, it seems like our Moms know just what to say to make us really upset. It can be something really small but make us livid with anger.

When your Mom says something to you that just “presses the wrong button,” take a moment. Instead of responding angrily or reacting too fast, tell yourself to think about the situation.

If you just get mad and start yelling, nothing will be accomplished. Instead, try to think about your Mom. Why is she reacting this way? Try to put yourself in her shoes. Then...

2. Communicate.

Ugh! When you feel really strongly about something, you either want to yell, cry or walk away. Instead, try to have a discussion with your Mom. Sit down and quietly discuss the situation and why your Mom feels the way she does and why you feel the way you do.

It’s amazing what a little discussion can do. And if you don’t think you can talk to your Mom, talk to a mentor, family member, teacher or friend. Get whatever it is off your chest. You’ll feel better and learn how to communicate better in the process.

3. Be Honest.

When you talk to your Mom, be honest. Tell her why you want to wear a certain outfit to dance class, why you are running late, why you haven’t practiced, etc. Then, listen to what she has to say. Hopefully, she will be honest too, and you can work things out.

Professional dancers have to be reliable and responsible. Otherwise, they don’t get hired for dance jobs or move up in their career. Why not start being reliable and responsible now? And I know this can be really hard. But it’s a part of growing up. Start being honest with yourself and others. Not only will you become a better person, but you’ll become a better dancer too!

Build Your Relationship

It can be really hard to grow up with a parent you don’t get along with or understand. And when you add all of the stress of dance rehearsals and shows, the cost of dance classes and dance clothes and practice time, things can get ugly. When you are having a difficult time dealing with your Dance Mom, take a quick look at the list above. The best way to deal with difficult times is to take a moment to think, communicate and be honest. And if you can’t talk to your Mom, and it seems hopeless, try to find someone you trust and respect to help you.

By working out problems in a calm, honest fashion, you’ll be more likely to avoid big blowouts. Plus, you’ll be able to come up with solutions both you and your Dance Mom will be happy with. And most important, you’ll learn how to be a better person... which will help you in the dance world and the real world the rest of your life.
